Staff Profile

My name is Isabella Kasselstrand and I am a lecturer in the Sociology Department at the University of Aberdeen.

I love teaching Sociology – the scientific study of social relationships and patterns – and especially research methods and statistics.

I am a firm believer that anyone can learn to analyse and interpret social science data proficiently – and even enjoy it! Such skills make sociology graduates of the University of Aberdeen highly marketable in various professions.

I use statistical methods in my own research on social change, primarily on patterns of religious decline around the world.
