

2

to abate their opposition to each other, is a traitor to life. Whatever opinions I hold & express therefore, I always account it good if these evoke antagonism.

Thus do I think it impossible to hold two ~~diametrically~~ or more diametrically opposed opinions on matters simultaneous - or immoral to indulge all of these in succession - so, however strongly I may combat other people's ideas for tactical purposes, I am really never sufficiently opposed to oppose them - at least altogether - in reality, and certainly never bear any ill-will although I often make a point of writing as if I did.

With every good wish,

Yours sincerely,

C. M. Grieve