Acknowledgments

The production of this publication is the result of a multi-agency collaboration between different sectors working to prevent and to mitigate homelessness in Aberdeen City. We would like to express our most sincere and special gratitude to the various organizations and services existing in Aberdeen who have collaborated by sending their information and subsequent updates which were essential for the development of the project and for the unveiling of our reality, in terms of the guarantee of rights, not just for those who are in a vulnerable situation, but all citizens in Aberdeen. We would like to thank Aberdeen City Council, and to Shelter Scotland for our partnership working and the national discussion platform for health and social care integration.

Preface

Public Health Scotland

The oral health challenge facing Scotland remains enormous, despite many years of service and access improvement. This is in part due to the profound inequalities we experience in Scotland. This injustice also appears to hit hardest among the most marginalised and excluded in our society. These challenges are documented in a series of recent Scottish research reports and policy responses on homelessness, substance use harms, the impact of childhood adversity, poverty, violence and involvement in care, justice and immigration systems.

In healthcare, and oral health in particular, there are a series of structural barriers in place, especially for those at the edges of society often with the least leverage and power. In response to this public health crisis we all rightly be tapping into and endeavouring to work alongside those with lived experience to better understand and adapt our approaches in ultimately upholding the human right to health and dignity. This is where a reflexive mapping methodology detailed in this report focused on local collaborative working between health, social care and voluntary/community services can provide useful insights for change.

In listening and working towards participation and co-production, Smile4Life continues to rally us towards the edges and at times, dark corners of Scottish society. Reflexivity brings a humble and curious approach to tricky social dilemmas by challenging our assumptions of the current system. More importantly it challenges us all to act on this knowledge and I would encourage partners within and beyond oral health and homelessness to consider its applications.

The report builds on the previously published Dundee City mapping via collaboration with key statutory, education and voluntary sector partners. It captures a range of local, often distinct services and approaches which immediately calls for collaborative effort and integration. While this report shines a critical light in particular on oral health, homelessness and marginalisation, it therefore captures a broader and pertinent set of questions for all public services.

- What are the values which underpin these structures?
- Who do our services ultimately serve?
- Who is missing from our services and why?
- What can we all do to be more inclusive, creative and ultimately compassionate in our roles?

Please consider these in a 'reflexive' way as a reader and join Smile4Life in its ultimate aim for not only oral health, but health and wellbeing for all.

Foreword

Shelter Scotland

Shelter Scotland previously collaborated with Dr Andrea Rodriguez and colleagues to undertake their Reflexive Mapping Exercise in Dundee and are happy to be a named partner in the publication of this Smile4Life Reflexive Mapping Exercise for Aberdeen.

Homelessness is a health and social care issue and we must take a rights-based approach to address barriers to vital services. Smile4Life surfaces the challenge for people experiencing homelessness in accessing oral healthcare; and by deploying this reflexive mapping methodology, asks the pertinent questions about the structural barriers aligned to inequalities which are deep-rooted in our systems and cities and how they impact individuals and communities.

At its heart, though, is a demonstrative commitment to collaboration across a multi-agency sector and a recognition that no single organisation can meet the needs of people experiencing homelessness. Each organisation plays a part in this eco-system and the report surfaces insights in respect of social and health inequalities, identified need and the role of the sector in responding holistically.

As we reflect on the inherent calls for integrated approaches, accessibility and responsiveness to individuals and communities, we must also reflect on our responsibility to listen to the lived experience of people facing homelessness and poor housing. We must actively listen; and then we must act. The expertise and insight gained through personal experience must remain front and centre of the design and delivery of services if we are to ensure authenticity of our responses.

Shelter Scotland operates a Hub in Aberdeen and we recognise both the opportunity that is created through this mapping of services in the city and the responsibility that is incumbent upon us, through our community-focussed programmes of work, to identify the opportunities for increased collaboration to drive local change to improve the health, social care and housing journeys of people experiencing homelessness.

Introduction

Smile4life is the Scottish Oral Health Improvement Programme for people experiencing Homelessness. Established in 2007, the first action of the Smile4life Programme was an oral health and psychosocial needs survey together with a qualitative exploration with people experiencing homelessness in Scotland. This was one of the world's largest surveys on the oral health and psychosocial needs of homeless people (Freeman et al., 2011) and produced data on demographic profile; health and health behaviours; degree of patient management complexity and psychosocial health of 853 participants. The survey and qualitative findings were used to co-design the Smile4life Guide for Trainers (Freeman et al., 2012) to support professionals working within the homelessness sector to promote oral health and enable health behaviour change.

An integral part of the Smile4life programme was its integration as an oral health promotion programme to be rolled out across all Scottish NHS Boards as well as Community and Non-Governmental Organisations with the ambition to (i) translate the Smile4Life research findings into practical changes across health and social services, and (ii) to positively change the experience for people using both health and social services.

One of the key challenges identified by the Smile4life accompanying evaluation programme (Beaton et al, 2016), was the lack of effective integration between health practitioners and Third Sector Organizations and between health and social services. A qualitative exploration suggested that on many occasions this was due to a perceived lack of understanding and knowledge of available health and social services that provided support to homeless people as well as pathways to referral. To address this notable issue, Smile4life initiated a process of active engagement and dialogue with policy makers and key NGO organisations that were working to support and to prevent homelessness. One of the outcomes of these discussions was the development of a Reflexive Mapping Exercise (RME) in four Scottish cities (Dundee, Aberdeen, Glasgow and Edinburgh) in conjunction with NHS Boards, Local Authorities, Universities and Shelter Scotland.

The Dundee Mapping was the first publication of this series (Rodriguez et al., 2019) and initiated a national platform to discuss health and social care integration for people experiencing homelessness across Scotland. The Public Bodies (Joint Working) (Scotland) Act 2014 (the Act) required NHS Boards, Third Sector and Local Authorities to integrate the planning and delivery of health and social care services. As specified in this Regulation from 1st April 2016 it is assumed a full operational plan of responsibilities focusing on improving outcomes and building services through collaboration and integrated approaches. The main purpose is to use the available resources to improve the wellbeing of people who require support from both health and social care sectors. Although the current public policy on Health and Social Care Integration aims the promotion of a more coordinated access to services in support to vulnerable groups this is still a challenge in Scotland. Joint work between Local Authorities, NHS Boards and civil society organizations is required to address better communication between these sectors and to avoid restricted referrals as well as limited guarantee of rights for those in need.

The Reflexive Mapping Exercise (RME) (Rodriguez et al., 2020), thus provides a practical framework in the context of the design and implementation of health and social care integration to tackle homelessness by providing an understanding of the current availability of services under seven areas of support (Rodriguez et al., 2019).

Using a collaborative and multi-agency approach the RME contributes to increase the accessibility and the engagement of vulnerable users with a wide range of services designed to them. This publication, therefore, increases, people's awareness on existing services and opportunities for both practitioners and service users through a collective process to stimulate insights and mobilize a collaborative agenda in search for better communication and integration of services.

With a great joy we present this publication of the mapping process of services in Aberdeen City.

Overview and summary of contents

The contents of this document provide a catalogue of available services to support vulnerable groups in Aberdeen. It also provides evidence for the inequitable distribution of services by social deprivation and geographical distribution.

[1] Contents of the document

The Reflexive Mapping Exercise for Aberdeen was divided in eight areas of support as seen in Figure 1. These services are:

- Housing Support (15 services)

Service Support Category

The final number for each category of support reflects only the main service offered by the organisations included in this mapping and not others additional services that may also be offered by them (i.e a food banking service that also offer information and advice).

Each section of this document contains detailed information on each type of service as mentioned above. As the Mapping process is guided by a principle of constant construction in each of the sections, extra blank pages have been included to allow practitioners to add any further and relevant information regarding the specific service.

In addition, the following information about the named services has been included in each of the sections relating to the specific facility. These include:

- Name of the organisation;
- Name of the service;
- Contact information;
- Aim or mission of the service or organisation
- Services provided
- Target group(s)
- Area of intervention

The RME is not yet finished but is always under construction, and always responsive to the needs of individuals and their communities. There was no intention to produce a complete catalogue covering all services in Aberdeen city. The RME is a national framework to map services in a collaborative and dynamic way. This is guided by a principle of constant development as new demands from practitioners, service users, communities and the government arise. The expectation is that the data collected will advise future work programmes, and inform new policies and interventions to improve quality of life and access to services for the population in Aberdeen.

The Dundee mapping was launched in 2019 and following the publication of the RME Aberdeen, there are two other reflexive mapping exercises in progress in Edinburgh and Glasgow.

The RME in Aberdeen, as in other cities, has enabled us to know who we are, what we do and what we want, as well as to initiate a process to achieve better linkage of professionals and service users with key available services. The data presented here provides relevant information for local authorities and government agencies to identify gaps in service provision and inequitable distribution of services. This can help them plan their interventions to mitigate and to prevent homelessness. We hope this RME will be used by all people and groups who believe in, and support the promotion of, social justice.

Achieving this involves the public, diverse professionals and other stakeholders working together to shape future plans for the city.

Services Provided

- Restorative Justice- The Sycamore Tree Course, delivered in HMP Grampian, fundamentally changes the way offenders think about their behaviour, actions & attitudes. The program is helping people to break free from the cycle of offending by increasing awareness of the impact of their actions on victims, building belief that an offending lifestyle is not desirable & demonstrating that the cost of crime is greater than its rewards.
- Community Chaplaincy- Bespoke practical & emotional support for ex-offenders designed to help navigate the complex issues associated with release from prison, integrate into their communities & avoid re-offending.
- Debt help and money and budgeting skills
- Drop-in centre- The drop in centre creates safe social spaces for men & women to hang out, chat & make new friends. There are various forms of support & activities available like games, breakfast / lunch, access to food parcels, cookery, crafts, nail painting, access to the internet & a computer, help with form filling, group excursions & accompaniment to appointments where necessary (Women 12pm-2pm; Tuesday, Men 10am-12pm; Thursday).
- Storehouse- Storehouse provides 10 tonnes of emergency food to around 400 people across 7 locations in Aberdeen & Aberdeenshire; people who would otherwise go hungry. It relies on the generosity of people & communities.
- Lifestyle- Lifestyle is a gateway worship service for anyone who is marginalised, disadvantaged, excluded or isolated. It includes time to hang out & chat, a cooked meal, a short worship service & access to Storehouse. It is an inclusive family of people at all stages of life (Monday 5.30-8.30pm).
